What is Health Insurance?

Health insurance provides financial protection against medical and hospitalization expenses. The insurance company pays eligible expenses according to the policy terms and coverage limits.

How to File an Insurance Claim

To file a health insurance claim, the policyholder should submit the required documents to the insurance company. These documents may include the claim form, hospital bills, medical reports, discharge summary, and other documents requested by the insurer.

Cashless Claim

For a cashless claim, the policyholder generally visits a network hospital and provides the insurance policy details. The hospital coordinates with the insurance company or its third-party administrator for approval.

Reimbursement Claim

For a reimbursement claim, the policyholder usually pays the eligible hospital expenses first and then submits the required bills and documents to the insurance company for reimbursement.

Important Documents

Common claim documents include the insurance card or policy details, identity proof, original bills, prescriptions, diagnostic reports, discharge summary, and completed claim forms.

Claim Processing

The insurance company reviews the submitted documents and checks whether the treatment and expenses are covered by the policy. The final decision depends on the policy terms, exclusions, limits, and submitted documents.
